

Publisher of St. Louis Post-Dispatch Announces Plans to Leave

April 25, 2006

ST. LOUIS--(BUSINESS WIRE)--April 25, 2006--Terrance C.Z. Egger, publisher of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, announced today that he is leaving for a new career.

"Even in a job you love, sometimes 10 years is enough," he told the staff. "This is a great newspaper with great people in a great city, and I know I would continue to be well satisfied staying many more years as publisher. I'm proud of our accomplishments, and I think the Post-Dispatch has an even more exciting future with our terrific new owner, Lee Enterprises. Still, I have found myself yearning for another good, new chapter of my life."

He added: "At this point, I'm not exactly ready to say how I want that new chapter to begin. I've always said that I wanted to return to teaching some day, and I've also thought about other roles in the newspaper industry. Whatever course I choose, my goal is the reward of personal renewal, and it's really not fair to talk about those things while I'm still conducting my current duties."

He said his resignation as publisher and as a vice president of Lee Enterprises, Incorporated (NYSE:LEE), is effective May 19.

Mary Junck, chairman and chief executive officer of Lee, said a search for a successor will begin immediately.

"I've enjoyed working with Terry over the last year, and we'll all miss him," she said. "He's been an excellent publisher, a thoughtful and gracious leader, and a valuable member of our senior executive team. We wish him the very best."

In addition to publishing the Post-Dispatch, Egger oversees all St. Louis operations, which include STLtoday.com, STL Distribution LLC and Suburban Journals of Greater St. Louis, a group of 43 publications, including 39 twice-weekly or weekly newspapers with distribution of 1.1 million copies a week.

Egger joined the Post-Dispatch as general manager in 1996 and was appointed publisher in 1999. Previously, he was vice president/advertising for Tucson Newspapers in Tucson, Ariz., which publishes the Arizona Daily Star and Tucson Citizen and was jointly operated by Pulitzer and the Gannett Co. Inc. Egger worked as marketing services manager and later advertising director for Copley Los Angeles Newspapers before joining Tucson Newspapers in 1992. He began his newspaper career at a small bi-weekly newspaper in Southern California.

Egger is a native of Rock Island, Ill. He earned a bachelor of arts degree from Augustana College in Sioux Falls, S.D., and received a master's degree in speech communication from San Diego State University. After graduating, he taught college communications and business-related courses in California before entering the newspaper industry.

His deep interest in education extends to his positions on the boards of Southern Illinois University-Edwardsville, Webster University and the newspaper technology training division of Southern Production Program, Inc. His charitable involvement includes serving on the board of directors for United Way of Greater St. Louis, Boy Scouts of America and St. Louis Crisis Nursery, as well as active involvement with St. Patrick's Center for the Homeless, Mathews-Dickey Boys' & Girls' Club and the American Heart Association. As a civic leader in the St. Louis area, he serves on the boards of Fair St. Louis, the Regional Business Council and the Regional Commerce and Growth Association.

He and his wife, Renuka, have three children.
